The benefits of playing with LEGO®

Social and Emotional Skills

Playing with bricks together with other children (or parents) can help your child develop his/her social and emotional skills.

From distributing bricks to deciding what to build and agreeing on designs, playing with bricks teaches and develops important skills - such as negotiation, compromise, respect for others, helpfulness, and following rules (mind you, some of these rules will not make a whole lot of sense to adults and/or be made up completely on the fly).

Physical Skills

Your child's fine motor skills and hand-eye coordination can benefit greatly from playing with LEGO® bricks. Manipulating the small bricks into their proper places (or anywhere else, for that matter) requires a steady hand and a keen understanding of perspective and space - as well as a good deal of concentration and focus.

These are important life skills - and your child will put most of them to good use and develop them further when learning things like writing or tying shoe laces.

Cognitive Skills

As a building toy, it is fairly well-known that LEGO® can help to develop children's logical skills through the understanding of concepts like size, shape, numbers, order, area, length and pattern
