

The Salem Award for Human Rights and Social Justice

The Salem Award for Human Rights and Social Justice was established by the Salem Witch Trials Tercentenary Committee and was first presented in 1992. The purpose of the Award is to promote an understanding of the lessons of the Salem Witch Trials in the context of contemporary life.

Selection Criteria

By studying the Salem Witch Trials, we learn that order was restored to the Salem community by the outspoken protests of a few good citizens who spoke bravely and acted courageously in opposition to the prevailing chaos. In Salem, Massachusetts in 1692, certain individuals risked their lives to speak against the oppression of the trials and to call for order and forgiveness. Today, we continue to depend upon those few individuals who will not be silenced by fear and social disorder.

In recognizing and honoring present day champions of human rights and social justice issues we publicly acknowledge the powerful significance and practical consequence of their work and join them in fostering tolerance, compassion, and reconciliation within our community.

In particular the individual and/or organization to whom the Award is given must:

- Demonstrate a commitment through their work to human rights and social justice issues particularly within the two years preceding their nomination;
- Demonstrate courage in the face of bigotry and intolerance; and,
- Demonstrate that their efforts further the cause of human rights and social justice for an individual or group of individuals.

The Salem Award Committee will assess the merits of your nomination based on your responses to the criteria listed on the following pages and on any additional materials you provide. Up to three letters of support may also be submitted (see below for additional information on such letters).

Self-nominations will not be considered. The nominee may be an individual or an organization.

Please describe how the nominee meets each of the identified criteria.
The narrative statement for each criteria must be limited to 500 words.

The nominee has demonstrated a commitment to human rights and social justice and has particularly demonstrated such a commitment through work over the past two years. Consider the actions the nominee has taken to bring about change in an area pertinent to human rights and social justice. As much as possible, identify the dates and contexts of the nominee's actions.

The nominee has demonstrated courage in the face of bigotry and intolerance. Detail how and when the nominee has demonstrated courage in the face of bigotry and intolerance. Identify personal risks and/or hardships faced by the nominee in connection with human rights and social justice work.

The nominee's efforts have furthered the cause of human rights and social justice for an individual or a group of individuals. Identify the impact of the nominee's actions.

If you have a direct relationship with the nominee, please briefly describe the nature of the relationship.

Sources, Supporting Materials, and Letters of Support

Please note that while the following additional pieces of information are not required, they are often helpful in making decisions about award recipients.

Sources of Information about Nominee and Supporting Material

Please list your main sources of information for the facts contained in this nomination. Be as specific as possible, noting persons interviewed, websites, videos, film, articles, and/or print media. It is helpful to provide web links to articles, books, film and/or videos (no more than four) that document the nominee's activities. Such web links are most useful if they were recently published and come from a reputable news source.

Letters of Support

Letters of support for your nomination will likely strengthen your nomination. If you will be asking others for letters of support for this nomination, please identify those persons and provide contact information below. Letters of support should address the nominee's contributions to human rights and social justice and address the criteria for the award. Letters of support should also note the nature of the relationship between the nominee and the writer. Please note that The Salem Award Foundation will not request letters of support from listed persons; letters of support must be solicited by the nominator. However, representatives of the Foundation may contact individuals listed to gather additional information about the nominee.

Letters of Support (no more than three) have been requested from the following (please provide as much information as possible):
