

I'm a baby-boomer vacillating between employment and retirement, currently employed. Interested in gardening, cooking, hiking, classic automobiles, tinkering with anything mechanical, and building community through small groups. I am employed as the Director of Materials Management (Purchasing) for Appalachian State University in Boone, NC.

I am a father and grandfather and consider parenting and grand parenting to be the best opportunities God has given me in my life.

My wife Kathy and I have been married for 38 years, and we share some similar passions, especially parenting/grand parenting. Kathy and I are blessed to be at a place in life where we have options and are free to pursue those options.

I was introduced to Lumunos through attendance at Lumunos events in Nebraska. My wife Kathy and I were invited and joined the local Nebraska Team. We attended many Lumunos sponsored events around the country. I was invited to join the National Lumunos Team as Treasurer and have been a part of the Lumunos National Board for several years.

I am called to be a grandfather, to match problems with solutions, to see patterns in random events, to connect things that do not seem connected, to appreciate that which was once good and now seems irrelevant (it is still good), to ask well phrased and open-ended questions, to learn something new every day, to make things better, and to find my rightful place in the universe.

I play golf and that teaches me a lot about humility.
