For most congregations, going green sounds like the right thing to do. Whether their support begins as a general concern for the environment, a commitment to caring for God's Creation, or a desire to save money, most members like the idea of being greener. But then what? Where do you begin? How much will it cost?

PRESENTERS:

Andy Rudin from the Philadelphia area Interfaith Coalition on Energy will describe many facets of making a church building more energy efficient. He has audited some of our Penn Central Conference church buildings over the years, and is considered an expert in the field of church energy audits.

Chuck Hollingsworth, Vice-President - Sales and Marketing, from the UCC Cornerstone Fund, will describe the Cornerstone EcoLoan Program. The EcoLoan is designed for UCC churches and organizations making environmentally friendly improvements - from new landscaping or appliances to replacing an entire climate control system. Check out their Going Green Workshop Booklet.

Who Should Attend: Everyone is welcome! Those who might find it especially helpful are church council members, property committee members, "green" team members, justice and witness committee members, finance committee members, anyone interested in creation care and the environment.

Sponsored by the PCC Green Justice Ministry Team

Please register by Monday, September 21 so that we can be prepared for your participation. Send the bottom of this form to Penn Central Conference, 900 S Arlington Avenue, Room 227A, Harrisburg, PA 17109 along with your check.
