

Clinical Faculty in Primary Care – Osteopathic Family Medicine, Osteopathic Geriatric Medicine
College of Osteopathic Medicine
University of New England, Biddeford, ME

The University of New England College of Osteopathic Medicine invites applications for clinical-track faculty positions in the Department of Primary Care. We seek outstanding individuals with demonstrated excellence in teaching and modeling the broad range of skills required for family medicine to participate in the development and delivery of an innovative, interdisciplinary medical curriculum. The positions are combined clinical and academic with a choice of practice MatureCare – a university owned multidisciplinary group of providers providing medical directorship and clinical services to area skilled nursing and long term care facilities. Academic opportunities include teaching students through bedside precepting, workshops on case based learning and various courses in clinical skills emphasizing the integration of the Osteopathic Structural Exam. There is opportunity to participate in the design of these courses and assist in the integration of primary care into the entire 4 year curriculum at UNECOM.

Maine's only medical school, UNECOM is located on the southern Maine coast, 90 minutes north of Boston and 30 minutes south of Portland. The region is rich in history, culture, and natural beauty.

Applicants must have board certification in their specialty and experience integrating Osteopathic Manipulative Medicine into day-to-day primary care. Experience in the clinical academic setting either at the graduate or undergraduate level is preferred.
