

PET RELOCATION ON THE RISE In India

We've certainly had the pleasure of moving many pets in India and the country is experiencing a rise in both pet ownership and pet relocation.

The pet population is growing by approximately 20% each year, according to research done by Euromonitor International. It's expected that, by the end of 2015, there will be 12.5 million pets, up from the current number of 10 million pets in Indian households. Pet-friendly hotels and other accommodations are also blooming in India (see other article in this issue), as the country becomes more accustomed to pet travel.

This family recently moved from France to Bangalore, India with their beautiful babies, Cindy, a Weimaraner and Pomme, a European breed cat.

Here's what they told our office in India soon after settling into their new home:

"Once more, we thank you so much for the amazing job you've done! Cindy has adapted herself very quickly. She likes very much the walks she has twice a day. But most of all, what she likes so much is being with us . . . ever and ever. Now, it is the case and she seems so happy! For Pomme, it'll take a bit longer to get used to her new life. She has to delimit her territory. Currently, she's spending all the days long in my older's son bedroom just sleeping and sometimes eating. For us, the new year has started perfectly well. We wish you a very Happy New Year and oodles of pets transports all over the world. Making people happy makes oneself always happy, isn't it right?"
