

Spaghetti Supper Raises Funds for Equipment

AMSTUDIO

The Carolina School of Inquiry held a spaghetti dinner fundraiser this past week to raise money for the purchase of an AED (Automated External Defibrillator). The spaghetti dinner also included a silent auction and bingo which added some fun and competition for all.

Many Blythewood Lions attended the event to support the school where the Lions Club had already built a sandbox; helped paint and spruce up the school; implement a volunteer reading program, and recently worked to catalog the school's library books and implement a system for students to check out books. Lion Rhett Hair, a Paramedic by trade, had conducted a CPR and First Aid training class for the school's teaching staff and the need for the AED became apparent and thus the fundraiser developed.
