DRESS-A-DOLL

The sweep of the skirt in history

It's the second oldest garment known to man – after loincloths. And in ancient times both men and women wore them. What's easier than wrapping a piece of fabric around your waist? Working women at the turn of the century tucked their shirtwaists into long skirts. Chanel helped liberate women from their corsets with no-nonsense skirts that skimmed the knee, paired with smart jackets. Wartime skirts were short on fabric, but the postwar years were heralded by Dior's New Look that had yards of fabric in its skirts. The sporty separates of the 1950s gave women choices: wide puffy skirts with crinolines and straight skirts, some with a side slit for easy movement.

Midcentury style saw hemlines rise and fall. Who among us did not own a mini-, a midi-, or a maxi- skirt? I remember fondly the little cotton wrap skirt of the 1970s which was usually floral and was paired with a solid color T-shirt. Christian Lacroix's pouf balloon skirt of the 1980s was wildly popular and widely copied in that high-flying decade. By the 1990s, the long pencil skirt hobbled onto the scene and was the go-to outfit for working women. Recent summers have seen young women with skirts that have it both ways: short in front, long in back.

What's your favorite skirt? Let our model, courtesy of Jayne Keller, tell your skirt story for our Dress-A-Doll competition.

Instructions for Dress-a-Doll (Please read carefully)

People NOT able to attend may also send costumes and are eligible to win the book.

--Entries will be numbered as received, and luncheon attendees will vote for their favorite costume. The artist who sent in the winning costume will receive a gift.

--Costumes for the doll are to be your own work, preferably in color, cut or uncut. Please put your name on the BACK of your costume(s); if the name is visible, it will be covered during the voting for favorite costume.

Sales Tables: We need to know if you need a whole table or if a half-table is sufficient. If we have lots of people who wish to sell, some may have to be refused, so it will be first-come, first-served, but no more than one table per person/family. We would like everyone who wishes to sell items to have space, but this may not always be possible. There is no extra charge for table space.

Raffle items: If you intend to bring a raffle item let Linda Ocasio know in advance so she can prepare tags and information. Freebie table: We love to offer freebies at every luncheon and you'll often find cut and uncut paper dolls, vintage coloring books and even Victorian scraps on the freebie table. Bring the item with you to the party, and drop it off at Linda's room when you arrive.
