IMTI is an intensive training program offered over an eight-month period with monthly full-day sessions and reading and practicum assignments between sessions. The format includes presentation, small group discussion, and case study analysis to teach both theory and practice.

All pastors are interim and temporary at some level.

Some are more aware of this than others.

Some are more aware of this than others.

The Interim Ministry Training Institute (IMTI) offers training for those who want to be intentional about preparing for the privilege and responsibility of guiding a congregation through a time of transition and change. An interim pastor does not bring their own "agenda" to impose upon a congregation, but rather respects the church's needs, context, and culture.

Participants will learn theory and tools to assist churches to:

- seek God's Spirit at work among them in the midst of situations of grief, tension, uncertainty, challenge, and change
  - explore the direction, mission and ministry to which God might be calling them
  - deal with obstacles to effective ministry
  - claim and develop their spiritual gifts and resources
  - make healthy transitions in pastoral leadership
