If you haven't had time in all the rush of 2015 to reflect on what is really important, there may be time during the holidays ahead. In this issue of Diamond V Update, President and CEO Jeff Cannon provides a brief overview of high points of the year for Diamond V.

One way or another, Jeff's seven bullet points connect to the "big picture" of helping to advance global food safety, sustainability, and affordability. Whether we're producers or consumers, food goes way back for us all...

"We are born with 'but two wants -- to eat and to sleep,' and the 'eat' comes first...." -- O.W. True in The United States Medical Investigator, Volume VI, 1869

Because "eat comes first," the safety of food is critical. Despite tremendous advances thanks to science and technology since the 19th Century, food safety pops up as the foremost concern of consumers in many countries, who may or may not know how much safer food is today than in earlier times.

An annual survey of U.S. consumers underscores the importance of food safety, which was ranked as the most important food topic, followed by nutrition. Dr. Stephanie Frankenbach, Diamond V Poultry Marketing Manager, pointed out that the 2015 Hunter Public Relations study showed 45% of Americans believe food and nutrition stories are more important than other news stories, up from 40% in 2014 and 32% in 2013. A news release on the survey noted: "Among Millennials, the youngest group surveyed in this study and a key group for marketers, that importance jumps to 54%."

According to the Hunter surveys over the past three years at least, food safety concerns among U.S. consumers on average are increasing at a rate of more than 5% per year. Looking toward 2016, food safety must remain a priority for the entire food industry – both in fact and in perception. For our part at Diamond V, we're on the leading edge of pre-harvest food safety for food animals, which can go a long way toward ensuring overall food safety.
