Description

Young people are acutely aware of the problems facing their families and communities. Advocates for youth involvement argue that the most successful prevention programs engage youth in all aspects of planning, as well as in the implementation, management, and evaluation of program activities. This course is designed to help practitioners develop the knowledge and skills to do this effectively, by creating opportunities to involve youth in meaningful ways.

What Does Participation Entail?

This course will take approximately two to five hours to complete —timing will vary depending on the participant's familiarity with the content, learning style, and competing demands on time. Participants will be provided with access information following registration.
