Content

We are always learning what is of interest to our readership. The ECHA news will adapt to reflect input from readers. We welcome the following:

- feature stories about ECHA occupants (individual or group successes, new people or groups moving into ECHA space);
- public events occurring in ECHA (lectures, seminars, guest speakers, fundraisers, etc);
- announcements pertinent to the building.
- articles highlighting interdisciplinary (ID) work within your faculty or department;
- stories about students pursuing ID research or engaged in interprofessional (IP) education;
- published interdisciplinary or interprofessional education research;
- other content is welcome – please get in touch echainfo@ualberta.ca

Some specifics

- Advertising for commercial entities or activities is not permitted in the ECHA News.
- Content providers are responsible for fact-checking content and links they provide.
- Submissions may be edited for tone, voice and content.
- Submissions may or may not be selected for inclusion. All writing will be edited for Canadian style.
- Weights and measures should be in metric first, with conversion to imperial in brackets if required.
- All guidelines quoted should be from Canadian sources (food guide, physical activity guide, recommended daily allowance etc.).
- Content should be sent as an MS Word, or Pages document, or in the body of an email.
- Content should not be formatted except as necessary (no bold, italics, fancy fonts, borders etc).
- Please note the total width of the newsletter template is 240 pixels.

Write for a General Audience

- Acronyms – Spell out all acronyms the first time they're used. (with some exceptions)
- Jargon – Please avoid jargon; while your co-worker might 'speak the same language' a general audience will not. In the spirit of interdisciplinary communication, make sure readers in other disciplines can understand your ideas!
- Reader's knowledge level – Even in a university, write as if the reader knows little about your topic; for example, briefly explain important points and never assume that the reader is already familiar with specific parts of your project/work area. This is an electronic document, so remember to embed links in areas where the reader may want to find out more!
- Skip minute details – Focus on an overview; your audience will get lost in excessive detail.
- Direct, simple language – Keep it simple. Writing should not be arduous – if it is then the reading will be equally unappealing.

Write for a web audience

- Inverted Pyramid Elaborate the main point first and work downwards in terms of priority of information.
- Concise Text Remove redundancies and unimportant details.
- Sub-Headlines Break long paragraphs of text into smaller chunks with headlines and sub-headlines.
- Use Bullets Use bullets to show listed items; it makes the content easier to read and appear more organized. (Please use these guidelines for formatting bullets)
- Contextual Links Include links to related content, and make sure that the words or phrases you use as links are contextual.

Edit, edit, edit

No one knows your content as well as you, but a second set of eyes always helps; take a few minutes to have someone else proof read your article.
