Course Description:

In this interdisciplinary course, the central ethical issues that arise in research involving human participants will be examined and discussed. Concepts such as risk, vulnerability, consent, and misconduct will be explored across a broad range of research methods. Of interest will be the politics of knowledge, truth, and evidence, the oversight of research, and the education of the ethical researcher. Students will gain practical skills in designing ethical research protocols in their area of professional expertise. Specific topics brought to the class by students will also be given consideration.
