Special Workforce & Education Issue!

Lake County Chambers of Commerce General Membership Meeting

WE ARE ALL EDUCATORS.

Come find out why.

Dr. Kirsten Ellenbogen,
director of the Great Lakes Science Center, will speak at a countywide chamber lunch.

"Education is a responsibility not limited to schools."

8-30-16

LA MALFA, MENTOR

Dr. Kirsten Ellenbogen, President of the Great Lakes Science Center speaking on "Education is Neither a Practice nor a Responsibility That is Limited to Schools"

You don't have to be in education or work for an economic development agency to have a role to play in the growth of the workforce in any community. In fact, according to Kirsten Ellenbogen, Ph.D., if we relied only on schools and the experiences they provide, our workers would be ill-prepared for the jobs of today, much less those of tomorrow.

Working from her own experience at the helm of one of our region's top informal science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) education providers, Great Lakes Science Center President Dr. Ellenbogen will share her vision of what smart communities are doing to become even smarter.

Shining A Light On The LED Alternative

For more than 100 years, fluorescent bulbs have been the go-to lighting source for scores of businesses. But is it the best source? A recent report from Energy Focus, Inc., titled "LED Lighting Sets the New Standard" points out the many positives associated with LED lighting.

Light-emitting diodes (LED) lighting are expected to replace nearly all artificial lighting in the United States by 2030. The cost of LEDs has been driven down in recent years, thus making them a more viable alternative. But a lower cost isn't the only benefit to LEDs. The Energy Focus report points to other, perhaps less obvious, benefits of making the switch to LED lighting.

Light distribution

First, starting with basic aesthetics, LED lighting evenly distributes colors across a space. This results in more saturated, vivid, discriminable color and visual acuity. And the color rendering, temperature and efficiency (LEDs use about 80% to 85% less electricity than incandescent lighting) of LED lighting is continuing to improve.

Wellbeing

The improved lighting does more than just look good. LED lighting is used in the treatment of Seasonal Affective Disorder, and has been shown to improve mood, decrease stress, and create a generally healthier and happier environment because the lighting mimics natural sunlight. Mimicking sunlight also has a positive impact on the bodies' Circadian Rhythm and can help keep individuals on a healthy sleep/wake cycle.

Environmental benefits

The LED bulbs contain no mercury or hazardous waste and are 100% recyclable. Further, they can last 20-times longer than any other artificial light source, reducing the time, cost and effort of maintenance.

Filling agricultural and seasonal labor needs can often be a challenge. Many businesses look to hire foreign nationals through the various temporary visa programs, such as the H-2A and H-2B programs in order to meet this challenge. More and more businesses that utilize these programs, however, are facing difficulties in having the workforce they need when they need it, not to mention the year-after-year cost of sponsoring visa-holders. What many employers may not realize is that it might be beneficial to start thinking green-as in green-card petitions-for their workers in lieu of the yearly, costly, and often uncertain process of obtaining temporary visas.

H-2B visas are temporary, employment-based non-immigrant visas that allow foreign-born workers to be admitted to the U.S. to perform specific jobs for the petitioning employer. The jobs must be seasonal, peak load, or a one-time need and are valid for a maximum of 9 months for full-time work (at least 30 hours/week), with extensions allowed in some cases. The visa holder must remain outside the U.S. for a maximum of 3 months per year. As many employers may already know, there is an annual cap on the number of these visas issued each year (66,000), and quite often the cap is reached before the needed employees can obtain the required visas in order to enter the U.S.

Similar to the H-2B visa program, H-2A visa program provides visas for workers performing agricultural labor or services of a temporary or seasonal nature. Under this program, "agriculture" is defined as farming in all its branches, the raising of livestock, and any practices, including forestry and lumbering incident to or in conjunction with farming operations including preparation for market and delivery. Under the H-2A program, "seasonal" is defined as work that is tied to a certain time of year by an event or pattern such as an annual growing cycle and "temporary" is where the employer's need lasts no longer than one year.

Both the H-2A and H-2B visa programs require the employer to first obtain a prevailing wage determination for the position to be sponsored from the Department of Labor. In addition, the employer must advertise the position in an effort to first obtain any ready, willing, and able U.S. citizens or green-card holders to fill the position and must then receive an approved labor certification application for the position from the Department of Labor. Once the Department of Labor has certified the position, the employer files a visa petition for the worker to fill the position with U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services and upon approval, the prospective employee will be interviewed at the nearest consulate for purposes of receiving the appropriate visa.

What may surprise many employers is that obtaining permanent residence or "green-card" status for their employees involves nearly the identical process as that for the temporary visa programs. In contrast to having to pay the expenses year after year for the temporary visa-holders, business owners who decide to sponsor their interested employees for permanent residence can avoid the annual costs as well as the yearly uncertainty of the availability of the workers they depend on. While it may not be the answer for every employer, some may find it a good solution to the problem of keeping a consistent workforce, and should therefore "think green" in order to meet their temporary or seasonal employment needs.
