The Northern California Chapter, NECA is committed to exploring innovative ways to better communicate with the next generation of the emerging workforce. Millennials engage and absorb information in a much different manner than those raised without the constant availability of a smart phone and internet access. The other challenge is motivating the millennials to take on a more entrepreneurial role within your company. We are excited to announce we have engaged one of last year's National NECA Convention Speakers, Nic Bittle, to speak to our group on developing your workforce.

Develop Your Workforce to Increase Your Profit and Market Share

Developing the communication and decision-making skills of your workforce is critical to success on and off the job site. This program will discuss what it takes to develop our current workforce and create a plan and a path for the professional development of the emerging electrical worker. You will learn how to develop your workforce for improved success, identify the mistakes we are all making with our current training models, and the steps any leader can take to significantly change the culture of their workforce.

"At the end of the day we are not just about building better buildings, we are all about building better people" - Nic Bittle
