The history of edible gardening in the modern era owes much to the urban community garden, most notably the WWII victory gardens. From 1942-1945, Peterson Garden at the corner of Peterson and Campbell in Chicago was one such garden, and in 2010 LaManda Joy restored edible gardening to the lot with the Peterson Garden Project.

Since then, the Peterson Garden Project has won 1st place from the Mayors' Landscape Awards, as well as recognition from Woodbridge by Robert Mondavi Giving Through Growing Garden Heroes, and has donated hundreds of pounds of food to local nutrition programs.
