Great Possessions: An Amish Farmer's Journal by David Kline, is a collection of essays written for the Amish magazine, Family Life. With horses and the help of his family and friends, Kline practices diversified sustainable farming on 120 acres of land in the Amish community of Fredericksburg, Ohio.

This I Believe: Kentucky, edited by Dan and Mary Jo Gediman, gathers 60 authors who are either from Kentucky or who are writing about Kentucky into one volume of inspiring and thought-provoking essays. These individuals, some famous and some not, thoughtfully explore their core values and guiding principles.

Fanny at Chez Panisse by Alice Waters relates her daughter Fanny's stories of this busy restaurant in Berkeley, California. This book is a friendly and funny introduction to the delights of real restaurant life with recipes that show how easy and inexpensive it is to make good food with basic ingredients and simple techniques.
