

Dwane Brown

Dwane Brown is currently news editor/anchor for San Diego Week on KPBS TV and co-host of NPR's Morning Edition on radio. He is an award winning broadcast journalist, who has a long history with KPBS.

The San Diego Press Club named Brown the Best Morning Newscaster in San Diego Radio for the past four years. In 2006, the Society of Professional Journalists also named him Best Morning Newscaster.

Brown is also a pioneer of broadcasting on the Internet. In 1999, he was one of the first news reporters to use streaming technology. He interviewed hundreds of chief executives at investment conferences across the country for On24.com. Brown is a Fast Trac graduate from UC Berkeley's Haas School of Business. He also studied English/Journalism at San Diego State University.

In addition to being a broadcast journalist, he's a public speaker and instructor. He's also provided his smooth, low voice for various movie, documentaries, radio, television and Internet projects.