A Message from AMSA President, Robert B. Heasley

Welcome to our 21st annual conference. When I developed my first course on Men and Masculinity in 1987 (at that time “masculinity” was still singular), my class filled almost immediately. But I was surprised that they were all female. It never dawned on me that males would not be interested in this topic. After all, this topic had mattered to me as a male since the 1970s, when I had discovered feminist analysis, become a father to a son, and worked in a batterer’s intervention program. Critically thinking about the “49%” as our colleague Robert Brannon named it in one of the early books on men’s studies, just made sense. When I asked students to share about their interest in the course, they talked about their interest in being more compassionate for and toward men. “My boyfriend really needs to understand himself and his emotions better so I thought this course would help me help him.” Or “I have a son and I worry whether I’m going to do some harm because I am a single mother and his father is not in his life.” Caring, compassion, seeking to know and to know better this subject called “males” and the abstraction called “masculinity” was a common interest of these students. I realized it didn’t matter in terms of the course whether the students were female or male, or for one of these students, identifying as neither. What mattered was attending to the journey of maleness as the subject of investigation and the creation of a new discourse on gender and men’s lives.

This weekend AMSA holds its 21st anniversary of our organization and its focused on academic and applied work related to the examination of the lives of men and boys. Our origin – prior to formally incorporating in 1992, goes back to the early 1980s with the formation of what was then called the National Organization for Changing Men, which became the National Organization for Men Against Sexism. As that organization evolved and changed, the American Men’s Studies Association formed its own organization to concentrate efforts on academic studies and applied initiatives – from therapeutic interventions to community programming that addressed, and grew out of, the critical thinking about men and masculinities.

I must admit, I smile as I look back at those early years of teaching men and masculinity. With the thousands of articles and books that have emerged since that time, the rich discussions across disciplines that have been part of AMSA conferences, the clarity by which we value feminist contributions, we have come to not only have a richer understanding of the plurality of ways males express and experience something called “masculinity,” but we no longer have a singular image of “male” as a sex or as a gender. We have indeed been – and are – part of an incredibly important endeavor that has changed the way we think in families, in communities, nationally and globally about “boys” and “men.” And enrollment in my courses is now about 50% males, who along with females and gender queer students, say that this stuff matters as they reach out for new images, new information, in understanding and enriching their lives.

This year’s conference is particularly exciting. Our conference chair, Daphne C. Watkins, and the conference planning committee have put together an incredible program. There were twice as many submissions than we were able to accept, making the selection process both very difficult as well as invigorating in terms of seeing how much was being done in the field. The mix of pre-conference workshops, research presentations, applied workshops, and keynote speakers provide a wealth of opportunity to witness and learn as well as find support for our own work.

My term as President of AMSA ends with this conference. In my six years in this role I have gained incredible appreciation for the wonderful work of our board and the many people who serve on our committees, and for all the work that is being done in our field. Please, if you are not already a member, make certain to join AMSA, contribute items to our website, to our newsletter and volunteer to serve on our committees. We do not have paid staff so the energy, time and commitment for keeping AMSA going/growing, for being a source for support for the work we do, relies on you.

American Men's Studies Association Mission Statement

The American Men's Studies Association advances the critical study of men and masculinities by encouraging the development of teaching, research, and clinical practice in the field of men's studies.

AMSA provides a forum for teachers, researchers, students, and practitioners to exchange information and to gain support for work on men and masculinities.

THE AMSA BOARD AFFIRMS THE FOLLOWING STATEMENTS ABOUT THE ORGANIZATION AND THE FIELD OF MEN'S STUDIES:

- Men's studies includes scholarly, clinical, and activist endeavors engaging men and masculinities as social-historical-cultural constructions reflexively embedded in the material and bodily realities of men's and women's lives.
- AMSA is multidisciplinary in nature and committed to disseminating new knowledge about men and masculinities to a broad audience.
- AMSA seeks the participation and membership of all men and women irrespective of race, class, ethnicity, sexual orientation, physical abilities, nationality, or religious identity.
- AMSA is committed to excellence, inclusiveness, and ethical behavior in men's studies research, publication, teaching, and practice.
- AMSA strongly encourages student participation and membership, offering scholarship and mentoring opportunities for young scholars in the field.

AMSA values and encourages mutually empowering scholarly and professional relationships that are generative, empowering, and affirming in nature.

A Message from the 2013 AMSA Conference Chair, Daphne C. Watkins

Welcome to the 21st annual conference and to the University of Michigan School of Social Work (UM-SSW). This year's conference is near and dear to my heart because this is our first conference at the UM-SSW. Over the past year, AMSA has made a number of transitions, one being the establishment of the UM-SSW as our institutional "home." This relationship has been an important part of AMSA's growth, and through this association we have been able to solidify administrative support and a location for future meetings that will help us anchor men's studies as an important field of study.

Many, many hours have gone into planning this, our 21st annual conference on men and masculinities. The interdisciplinary nature of the AMSA conference from year to year is what continues to intrigue me, and this year's program will be no different. Over the next three days, you will have an opportunity to meet colleagues from all over the world, and engage one another in some of the most pressing issues affecting our world today. As our colleagues from near and far convene for another year to advance the scholarship on men, masculinities, and intersecting identities, we are excited to have Dr. C. J. Pascoe as our keynote speaker during the Friday evening banquet. You do not want to miss her presentation, as I am sure it will challenge us all to think about homophobia and how it shapes what we know about masculinity. We are also pleased to have our Scholar in Residence presentation by Dr. Gary Barker during lunch on Saturday. Dr. Barker's international work should provide us with a thought-provoking model for effective ways to think and act globally about issues that involve men and masculinities.

I encourage you to engage one another on an academic and professional level, but I also encourage you to explore the University of Michigan campus and the City of Ann Arbor at your leisure. We have tried to include periods of "down time" during the conference so that you can connect with other members of the AMSA family, and explore all that the University of Michigan and the City of Ann Arbor have to offer.

The contributions of many people made this year's conference possible, and my sincere appreciation goes out to all of them. First and foremost I would like to thank Dean Laura Lein, and the UM-SSW faculty, staff, and students for their commitment to making this year's conference a comfortable space that is conducive for scholarly engagement and collegial dialogue. There are so many others whose tireless efforts have made my vision for this conference a reality. From the amazing work of Steppe Solutions, to our dedicated AMSA proposal reviewers, conference planning committee members, and student volunteers, I was able to remain sane and enjoy this labor of love. Indeed, my 'thank you' list can go on and on...

But I also want to extend my sincere appreciation to you, the 2013 AMSA Conference attendees we have been fortunate enough to serve. Thank you for your participation in this year's conference, and we look forward to joining you for excellent plenary sessions, stimulating and informative presentations, and great opportunities to network and develop future collaborations.

2013 AMSA Conference Keynote Address

Friday, April 5, 2013, 8 – 9pm, Michigan League, Ballroom

“Bros, Bronies and Bullies: Thinking about Homophobia and Masculinity”

C.J. Pascoe, Assistant Professor of Sociology, Colorado College

C.J. Pascoe is currently an Assistant Professor of Sociology at Colorado College. In the summer of 2013 she will be joining the sociology faculty at the University of Oregon. She teaches courses on sexuality, social psychology, deviance, gender and education. Her current research focuses on gender, youth, homophobia, sexuality and new media. Her book, Dude, You're a Fag: Masculinity and Sexuality in High School, won the American Educational Research Association's 2007 Book of the Year Award. Dude documents the relationship between homophobic harassment, heterosexism and masculinity in high school. In it she suggests ways we might begin to redefine gender norms that are damaging to both boys and girls.

Before going to Colorado College, C.J. spent two years working with the Digital Youth Project, part of the MacArthur Foundation's initiative in learning and new media. Along with her co-researchers and under the guidance of Mimi Ito, C.J. co-authored Hanging Out, Messing Around and Geeking Out: Living and Learning with New Media, the largest qualitative study of youth new media use to date. C.J.'s research has been featured in the New York Times, The Wall Street Journal, The Toronto Globe and Mail, American Sexuality Magazine and Inside Higher Ed. She has appeared in the Frontline documentary Growing Up Online as well as on National Public Radio's All Things Considered. With Professor Natalie Boero she is currently publishing a series of articles on online interaction in pro-anorexia discussion groups. The first of these, "Pro-Anorexia Communities and Online Interaction: Bringing the Pro-Ana Body Online," was recently published in the journal Body and Society. She received her B.A. in Sociology from Brandeis University in 1996 and a Ph.D. in Sociology from the University of California, Berkeley in 2006.
