

National Zero Waste Business Conference Coming in June

Come network with other professionals and tune in to what's new at the 5th annual U.S. Zero Waste Business Conference, "Tuning in to Zero Waste."

The conference, sponsored by the National Zero Waste Business Council (www.uszwbc.org), is being held June 1-4 at the Sheraton Austin Hotel at the Capitol in Austin, TX.

The event is conducted in partnership with local host Austin Resource Recovery in a city known for great music and Zero Waste. Come see what's new in the industry from experts who are making Zero Waste a reality by attending sessions focused on topics such as Zero Waste operations, economics, policies, and more. The conference will also provide educational resources and professional training for businesses to begin (or fine tune) their efforts in pursuing Zero Waste.

Mathy Stanislaus, U.S. EPA Assistant Administrator for the Office of Solid Waste & Emergency Response, has confirmed to keynote this year's conference. Mathy will present the importance of a circular economy and how Zero Waste fits into this circular economy, as well as addressing how a Zero Waste program addresses climate action plans.

Professionals from all sectors (private, public, nonprofit, academia) are invited to gain practical knowledge, explore new business opportunities, and learn how to create healthier, more productive and more efficient businesses.

Please visit the USZWBC website (www.uszwbc.org) for more information including conference topics, sponsorship opportunities, and registration rates.
