The Sorcerer's Apprentice: Teaching Technology in Waldorf Schools

As recent studies show, technology works like a drug. As with any drug, it can either help by speeding up and bolstering vital processes, or it can take over the very functions it was designed to assist. In the first case, technology behaves like a dutiful apprentice to the sorcerer. In the second case, the apprentice becomes the sorcerer.

How do we educate our students so that they are able to wield the sorcerer's wand without falling under its spell?

Presented by Douglas Gerwin, Ph.D.

About Douglas Gerwin, Ph.D.

A graduate of the Waldorf School of Garden City, Dr. Gerwin presently divides his time between adult education and teaching in various North American Waldorf high schools. In 1994, he founded the Waldorf High School Teacher Education Program under the auspices of the Center for Anthroposophy, which offers Waldorf teacher preparation in conjunction with Antioch University's New England Graduate School. As Chair of this program, Dr. Gerwin is responsible for readying high school teachers.
