Wayne State University's Urban Public Policy Resolution Conference will present and discuss latest approaches and concepts of professional conflict resolution practice in dealing with intractable policy disputes related to cities and metropolitan areas. The conference will demonstrate best practice professional techniques that have been applied locally, nationally and internationally, the end being to promote effective and appropriate mediation, negotiation, dialogue and restorative practice. Professional dispute resolution experts will present methodologies and models appropriate to public officials as well as civic and grassroots organizations, and panels will discuss the best means of implementation. Lessons learned in dealing with Detroit's and similar challenges in urban finance, land and resources, public services, and ethnic and police-community relations will be discussed. Among the main speakers will be Detroit federal bankruptcy mediators Judge Gerald Rosen and noted attorney Eugene Driker.
