International Speaker, Author, and Evangelist

Growing up as a sharecropper's son on Holly Brook Plantation on Way Way Lane in rural northern Louisiana, Larry struggled with the reality of racism.

An excerpt from his book, Amazing Grace Overcoming Race:

"The undeniable, unavoidable chains of bondage held me, my family, and all the black folk around us. It felt as though we were simply manacled puppets and the white landowners pulled the strings, those invisible chains, as they pleased. There was no regard for age or sex. Men and women, young and old, were manipulated within the carefully crafted structure of the sharecropper economy."
