RSWP Editorial Board: Call for Self-Nominations

Invitations are extended to members of the social work community to apply for a three-year appointment to the journal’s Editorial Board, for the period 2015-2017. Editorial Board members should be professional social workers with a background commensurate with the journal’s purposes. This would normally include receipt of a research-based doctoral degree, post-MSW practice experience, and having authored a number of empirically-based research publications related to social work practice, including intervention studies, psychometric reports and/or systematic reviews and meta-analyses. Editorial Board members are expected to use the Journal Article Reporting Standards found in the latest edition of the APA Style Manual, and the CONSORT and PRISMA standards, as appropriate, in preparing their analyses of submissions. In addition, knowledge of the principles of evidence-based practice and the work of the Cochrane and Campell Collaborations is essential. Editorial Board members are expected to accept for review about eight issues per year, and to make use of the journal’s web-based portal known as Manuscript Central to receive manuscripts and to submit their reviews. New Editorial Board members should be available to receive manuscripts for review beginning in January 2015. Usually, each week the Editor sends an email to the Editorial Board announcing what papers are available for review, and Editorial Board members self-select the papers they will review.

Interested social workers are invited to submit a cover letter expressing an interest in being appointed to the Editorial Board, along with a current c.v., (both formatted in Word), to the Editor, Bruce A. Thyer, Ph.D., LCSW, at bthyer@fsu.edu. General inquiries regarding an Editorial Board appoint may also be directed to the Editor.
