

Assessing the “Trauma-Informed” Landscape: Consensus around definitions, usefulness, and challenges associated with the term

Webinar Opportunities in November 2015

(For survivors and/or direct service providers only.)

The Sexual Violence Justice Institute at the Minnesota Coalition Against Sexual Assault (SVJI@MNCASA) has partnered with the Office on Violence Against Women to explore the concept of “trauma-informed” and its current application within the fields of sexual assault, domestic violence, dating violence, and stalking. In this special two-year project, SVJI will focus on learning the degree to which there is consensus among practitioners and experts on what the trauma-informed concept encompasses and when, where, and how the concept should be applied. We acknowledge that what is emerging in other fields can inform a definition, important principles, and best practices; therefore, we need to understand how people like you are thinking about, using, and applying the “trauma-informed” concept. The following webinars aim to illuminate this important information.

SVJI@MNCASA will be hosting four webinars in November of 2015. Each webinar will use a polling feature that will allow participants to weigh in on their agreement or disagreement with various aspects of the definitions, usefulness, and challenges associated with the trauma-informed concept. Participants and facilitators will then discuss results from the polls.

These webinars are designed for survivors and/or direct service providers ONLY.
