

Advocating & Learning About Economics for the Classroom

* K-12 Curriculum Included

for K-12 Educators (Public, Private, Charter, & Home Schools)

When: Sat. October 24, 2015

9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.

Where: Innovation Center
Univ. of Hawaii at Hilo
117 Keawe Street 2nd Floor

Cost: * FREE ****

- Includes workshop materials, coffee, snacks, & lunch!
- Includes K-12 curriculum valued at more than $40.00!
- All educators will be eligible for a $100 stipend after completion of the workshop and successful implementation of a workshop advocacy plan. Additional details given at workshop.

Course Description

A one-day workshop for public, private, charter, and home school educators (elementary, middle and high school level) who want learn and apply economic education in the classroom and to understand the process of advocating for economic education and financial literacy for Hawaii's keiki.

This workshop will give you concrete tools and a framework to make a difference at your school and in your community by helping your students increase their economic knowledge and potential for future financial stability.

Reserve your seat today by contacting Melissa at melissa@hcee.org or calling (808)447-9891 by Friday, October 16, 2015. Limited Seating Available. Please enroll early to ensure your seat to this special workshop for Hawaii's educators.

Join other elementary, middle and high school educators and other education-minded people!

What happens when you combine simulations, role-playing activities and mystery-based lesson plans with economics? The answer is simple: your students actually learn the concepts. Put economics to work in your classroom with tried-and-true lesson plans, and have your students actively master concepts like trade, money, opportunity cost, scarcity and inflation quickly and all while having fun.

Attendees will be provided age appropriate materials from the Council for Economic Education, a nationally recognized leader in the teaching of economics and financial literacy. These lessons will provide timeless teaching procedures (and yes these are step-by-step and super easy to follow too, so econ newbies have no fear), content standards that you'll cover, and reproducible activities and visuals hot off the press and ready to use in seconds.

This class will be taught by Dani de Jesus, an award winning AVID teacher from Maui High School and long time supporter of economic and financial literacy education in Hawaii. Learn how she approaches educational issues today to help make her students more successful tomorrow.

Sponsored by local organizations who support Economic and Financial Literacy Education in Hawaii including the County of Hawaii Department of Research & Development, HPM Building Supply, CU Hawaii Federal Credit Union, the Hawaii State Teachers Association, and the aio Group.