Also, send in your CONFERENCE REGISTRATION ASAP – time is growing short. I wish to remind the YOUNG LAWYERS not to miss the opportunity to mingle with the Judges, both Baldwin and Mobile Counties as well as our Federal Judges, at the Young Lawyer Mixer luncheon just prior to the Conference. The Young Lawyer Registration of $100 covers the YLMixer luncheon 11:00 am – 12:30 pm. as well as the Conference.

SIGNIFICANT DECISIONS

BY DUANE GRAHAM

In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court in Ex parte T.C., No. 1110250 (Ala., May 25, 2002), held that the appeal statute for juvenile proceedings – Ala. Code §12-15-601 – while not specifying that appeals could only be taken from final, nevertheless should be construed to require that appeals could only be taken from orders that were final.

In Hrynkiw v. Trammel, No. 1101099 (Ala., May 11, 2012), the Supreme Court affirmed a large verdict for the plaintiff in a medical malpractice case and, among other things, held that under Ala. R. Evid. 803(18), evidence of the statements contained in a learned treatise could be admitted into evidence over a hearsay objection, even though the plaintiff's expert testified on voir dire that he had not specifically relied upon that treatise to form his opinion, because the treatise supported the opinion.

In a case of first impression, the Court of Civil Appeals in Rearick v. Sieving, No. 2110473 (Ala. Civ. App., August 24, 2012), held that an agreement whereby the buyers agreed to allow the seller to live in a mobile home on property for the rest of her life did not create a life estate in the seller but only a revocable license. In particular, the defendants purchased property from the plaintiff on which a mobile home was located. At the closing and after plaintiff expressed dismay at having to vacate her house, the parties signed the following agreement:

We the undersigned, do hereby agree to allow Anita M. Rearick to live in the present residence on the following described property for the rest of her natural life. This agreement shall be binding on Immanuel C. Sieving and Jeri B. Sieving and their heirs and assigns. Anita M. Rearick agrees to maintain the residence in its current condition.

In addition to continuing to reside in the mobile home, the plaintiff let other people live there, kept a pet, and parked an 18-wheeler in the front. Eventually, the defendants decided to terminate the agreement, and the plaintiff sued. The Court concluded that the agreement had not created a life estate in the plaintiff but only a revocable license and, thus, having been revoked, the plaintiff no longer had any right to live in the mobile home. The trial court had considered parol evidence in reaching this conclusion. The appellate court reviewed the agreement and observed that the phrase “for the rest of her natural life” was consistent with a life estate, while the phrase “we hereby agree” was consistent with a license agreement. The Court thus found the language of the agreement to be subject to multiple interpretations, and this justified the trial court's consideration of parol evidence.

In Brown v. First Federal Bank, No. 2100921 (Ala. Civ. App., February 10, 2012), the Court of Civil Appeals held that the constructive notice created under the recording statute, Ala. Code § 35-4-90 did not apply to persons who were not under a duty to search the records, including antecedent owners.

The issue was presented in the context of a home equity loan mortgage that had been forged by a husband in his wife's name. When the wife sued the husband, the husband attempted to defend on statute of limitations grounds based on the notion that the forged deed was recorded and, thus, arguably provided constructive notice to the wife sufficient to trigger the fraud “discovery” rule. The Court held that an existing owner had no duty to search the records for forged deeds or otherwise and, thus, was not on constructive notice of the fraud.
