The Ovarian Cancer Institute

Mission

- To develop innovative research leading to earlier detection and more effective treatment;
- To provide educational opportunities for medical professionals;
- To educate women with respect to the early symptoms of ovarian cancer and empower them to seek appropriate care immediately.

Research

Diagnostics: Developing an Early Diagnostic Test

Dr. John McDonald, OCI's Chief Scientific Researcher, and his team of researchers take a unique approach to ovarian cancer diagnostics by studying metabolites. By doing this, they are working toward developing a diagnostic test that shows unprecedented accuracy in the presence of ovarian cancer before it develops and/or in very early stages.

Therapeutics: Developing Better Treatments

Even with accurate diagnostics, the need for cancer treatments will always exist. Most ovarian cancer patients are subjected to extensive surgery and chemotherapy that delivers a great amount of toxicity. OCI conducts research aimed at developing treatments that are not only more effective, but also less toxic than those currently available.
