

Columbia, South Carolina
Chief Clinical Officer

Palmetto Health is recruiting a Chief Clinical Officer (CCO) to serve as its leader in driving the system's continuing emphasis on high-value, safe patient care through oversight of all aspects of clinical performance, quality and clinical integration. The CCO will serve as a change agent in advancing and transforming care delivery. Palmetto Health is South Carolina Midlands region's largest integrated health care system, a six-hospital academic and community system, anchored by Palmetto Health Richland, a 649-bed regional teaching hospital. Palmetto Health also includes the Palmetto-USC Medical Group, the multispecialty, clinically integrated group of nearly 500 providers, and the Palmetto Health Quality Collaborative, comprising more than 1,200 physicians and initiated to help physicians collaborate to improve quality, reduce costs and effectively contract with payors. A robust graduate medical education program includes twelve residencies and eight fellowship programs. The successful candidate will be a physician with appropriate board certification, with progressive experience in clinical practice, preferably in both academic and community-based settings. The CCO will have a background in quality management, performance improvement and care redesign and will have at least five years in a physician/executive/administrative leadership role. An advanced degree in healthcare or a business related field is preferred.
