

Director of Surgical ICU at the UNIVERSITY OF NEW MEXICO in Albuquerque

Come start an ACGME Surgical Critical Care Fellowship and subsequent robust Acute Care Surgery Fellowship

Merritt Hawkins, a leading academic physician staffing and consulting firm, in partnership with the Department of Surgery at the University of New Mexico is seeking a Trauma Surgeon who specializes in critical care and acute care surgery (emergency general surgery and trauma) that can start a Surgical Critical Care Fellowship and be the Director of the S-ICU.

- You will support every aspect of Trauma/Acute Care Surgery/Critical Care.
- A lot of penetrating and operative trauma, the current faculty described it as “fun, high clinical surgical volume”
- Develop an ACGME-approved Surgical Critical Care fellowship and subsequent robust Acute Care Surgery fellowship.
- Participate in an active trauma surgery practice, as well as provide resident teaching rounds, medical student teaching and participation at local and national conferences.
- It is an excellent opportunity for a trauma surgeon interested in academic achievements and good clinical experience.
- Excellent compensation package is provided, including director stipend, RVU bonus, and call pay
- The University of New Mexico is an ACS-verified Level I trauma Center with approximately 2,500 admissions yearly. The University of New Mexico also maintains ACGME-accredited training programs in general surgery and all surgical subspecialties.

Qualifications:

- Board certified/eligible in Surgical Critical Care and General Surgery
- Completion of an accredited fellowship in trauma surgery
- Experience and training in a recognized acute care trauma center.
- Ideally, someone that loves complex cases
- Preferred: Successful track record of leadership in an academic medical center, distinguished personal record of clinical and research accomplishments in this specialty; and strong interest in teaching.
- Candidates currently completing critical care, trauma or acute care surgery fellowships who have a strong interest in a career in surgical education and desire a leadership position in running a Critical Care/Acute Care Surgery fellowship are encouraged to apply.

ALBUQUERQUE

This is a terrific place to live with countless outdoor activities available and true wilderness literally at your doorstep. Indeed, there are not many university cities of this size where you can be cross country skiing on a mountain top as the sun comes up and still get back in time for your morning clinic. Voted #3 in Bicycling Magazine as “Best Place to Bike in America.” Albuquerque contains enough excitement but if not, don't forget about the dunes of White Sands, the slopes of Taos, the art of Santa Fe or the caves of Carlsbad. There is an international airport and a rich metropolis of nearly 1 million people. There are 310 days of sunshine a year and mild climate with four distinct seasons and very low humidity.
