

Division Chief of Regional Anesthesia and Acute Pain Medicine | University of Iowa

Merritt Hawkins, the nation's leading academic physician search firm has partnered with the University of Iowa Department of Anesthesia to expand and grow their diverse Anesthesiology team. We are seeking faculty candidates with interest and expertise in several important clinical areas including regional and acute pain medicine, neuroanesthesia, obstetrical, and general OR anesthesia.

This Big Ten University has a longstanding history of academic excellence, and thus the ideal applicants should have interest in both clinical activity and education. We are also seeking applicants at the Associate or Professor level for Division Chief of the established Division of Regional Anesthesia and Acute Pain Medicine. We are seeking a proven leader to help expand the clinical, educational, and research programs of the Division.

The Carver College of Medicine is a top ranked medical school and the University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics is the only academic medical center in the state of Iowa. The Department of Anesthesia has a strong residency program with a 98% board exam pass rate. Faculty enjoy a very diverse case mix and the ability to sub-specialize within their clinical time. A large department of 70 clinical faculty allows for a great call rotation with only 1 – 2 in-house night calls per month. Faculty members receive guaranteed protected time for admin or research. The University of Iowa offers competitive base compensation and incentive bonus as well as a comprehensive benefits package with generous institutional retirement match.
