

Chair, Department of Radiology

Rutgers New Jersey Medical School invites applicants for the position of Chair of the Department of Radiology. We are seeking an individual with strong leadership qualities and a record of accomplishment as a clinician and researcher to lead a department with a faculty possessing broad expertise in both basic and clinical sciences. The department's clinical activities include musculoskeletal, neuroradiology, ultrasound, nuclear medicine, pediatrics, interventional radiology and neurointerventional radiology. The department actively engages in both clinical and basic science research. In addition, the department has major teaching responsibilities in the New Jersey Medical School and the Graduate School of Biomedical Sciences. The department trains the majority of radiologists in the State of New Jersey through its fully ACGME-accredited training program in Radiology.

The successful candidate should be a leader in the field of Radiology with a national and international reputation. The candidate must be expert in the complex management of this important hospital-based service in an academic and teaching environment. Candidates must also have clinical and basic science expertise, along with the ability to integrate both into a cohesive department excelling in research, education, and clinical service.
