The Division of General Internal Medicine in the Department of Medicine, Massachusetts General Hospital (MGH) and Harvard Medical School (HMS) is seeking a board certified Internal Medicine physician and academic leader to serve as the inaugural Peter L. Gross Chair in Primary Care at MGH.

This new position will support the academic work of a national leader in primary care. The academic activity could be within research or educational domains, but in both cases, the successful candidate will have a substantial record of accomplishment including extramural funding, scholarly productivity, and a strong track record of mentorship. A new research institute has been launched with the Department of Medicine at MGH to support investigators in both population and policy sciences and the first incumbent of this Chair would be a major contributor to this effort.

The incumbent will also serve as the Medical Director for the John D. Stoeckle Center for Primary Care Innovation, a center founded to support educational, clinical, and research initiatives focused on advancing the work of primary care providers. The Medical Director is responsible for overseeing the portfolio of center work and working with leadership in the Division of General Internal Medicine and Department of Medicine to expand academic activities and advocacy in primary care.

We are seeking candidates with a strong commitment to leadership and mentorship and experience in multidisciplinary team building, research and education. The incumbent will have met the requirements for appointment at the rank of Professor of Medicine or Associate Professor at HMS and will be committed to maintaining a significant clinical presence in our primary care community.

The MGH, a 900-bed tertiary and quaternary care hospital, is a founding member of Partners Healthcare, an organized system of quality healthcare delivery serving individuals, families and communities in New England.
