

A New Idea for Daily Meetings

Dr. Jason Morris recently asked a great question. He has recently implemented daily meetings at all of his offices, but was having trouble keeping them relevant. "We review the schedule and then we are done. I have tried reviewing a patient's record and many other things, but the staff is not really getting engaged."

It is best to have a daily review of one of the principles or values of the organization. At WGEC, we use the 20 Basics, "loosely" based on the Ritz Carlton. However Dr. Morris has not yet developed his 20 Basics. His question, "What can we talk about?"

The recent death of Coach John Wooden brought to light his famous Pyramid of Success. It contains 15 building blocks that will lead to success when practiced. LeadershipOD's recommendation is to use each building block as a topic for your daily meetings. A 4 - 6 minute discussion about one of his proven methods for success followed by a quick review of the schedule and any special situations for the day.

On Coach Wooden's site, each building block can be clicked and you can read more about how to use each of these principles. They can enhance any organization and can be repeated several times.

Dr. Morris has promised to let us know how it goes.
