Correcting Corrections: Road Map to the Mental Health of Our Communities

OVERVIEW:

This conference will examine the personal and societal impact of the correctional system. The program will consist of keynote lectures and panels addressing the societal costs of the correctional system. It will focus on systemic problems and policy challenges, specifically those related to the “war on drugs,” the social determinants of incarceration, the impact of racism and other forms of social exclusion, and the police and judiciary processes intended to reduce arrest and incarceration of people in need of behavioral health and substance use treatment. Lecturers and panelists will be community residents, advocates, and professionals reflecting diverse groups and communities and including individuals with ‘lived experience’ as inmates of jails and prisons. Panel discussions will provide extensive opportunity for audience comments and questions.

TARGET AUDIENCE:

The conference is intended for all stakeholders of the behavioral health and correctional systems. Behavioral health stakeholders include, but are not limited to: administrators, advocates, case coordinators, case managers, community members and community organizations, behavioral health and substance use consumers or service users, nurses, peer professionals and other peer workers, psychiatrists and other physicians, psychologists and all other providers.

Correctional system stakeholders include, but are not limited to: people with lived experience as inmates of jails and prisons; individuals, family members, and residents of all affected communities; advocates, police, corrections and probation staff, and judges or other law professionals; policy makers and public health professionals, government leaders, and other professionals and providers concerned with problems and improvements of the correctional system.

OBJECTIVES: At the conclusion of the program, participants should be able to:

- Voice their concerns and recommendations regarding the impact of the correctional system on families and communities
- Describe ways in which these issues impact individuals who serve time as inmates of jails and prisons, especially those with behavioral health and substance use disorders
- Describe ways in which health care and correctional system workers are affected by these problems
- Identify program and policy changes that can address these issues
- Identify the assessments and recommendations of behavioral health, community, and government leaders
