"The proper approach of the contract is not to avoid disputes, but adequately and efficiently to manage such disputes as must inevitably and properly arise." So said John Uff QC at the first Centre of Construction Law Conference in 1988. During the intervening period, the quest to establish adequate and efficient means of both avoiding and resolving disputes arising in construction contracts has seen the emergence of two separate success stories - the effective use of Dispute Review Boards, which aim to avoid, but not formally resolve disputes, and Adjudication, which provides a dispute resolution process which is fair, quick and economical. The two concepts have also been successfully combined in the form of Dispute Adjudication Boards and their use on international projects is growing.

This conference will bring together speakers from around the world to explore how the different types of Dispute Boards are being used and might be used in the future from both users' and funders' point of view, the various procedures available and the procedural rules published by the main institutions, and the significant issues that arise in practice.

The programme includes presentations sharing the experience of users, examination of the issues by expert lawyers, Adjudicators and Dispute Board members, and a debate comparing the pros and cons of Dispute Review Boards and Dispute Adjudication Boards. Sessions will cover the basics in the half day on Day 1, followed by exploration and discussion of the issues in greater depth on Day 2.
