

On Monday night the school's Guidance Department had the pleasure to meet with most of the parents of tenth grade students. The program demonstrated TABC's philosophy and desire to work as a unit to serve the needs of our students. The program began as Rabbi Ezra Wiener, our Mashgiah Ruchani, discussed religious guidance with the parents and how we work with every student to help with his religious development. He also discussed summer learning programs and gave an overview of the Israel Yeshiva program. Rabbi Steven Finkelstein, our Director of Guidance, talked about how to discuss various issues with students and how we all work together to enable our students to grow and develop. Dr. Garry Katz, our Director of College Guidance outlined the college guidance process and talked about what colleges are looking for in a student. Because of the upcoming changes in the SATs, Amy Asch of Princeton Review discussed standardized testing and in particular discussed the changes coming to the SAT in the spring of 2016. Dr. Atlas, our Director of Student Support Services, discussed the issue of students needing various accommodations and how to try to level the playing field for all students. The program serves as a continuation of the discussions we have already had with our sophomore students.
