

Answer...

While some of us may be challenged by artistic painting, with paint-by-number projects as our only hope, Aviva Woodland has no problem putting brush to canvas and enjoying her hobby.

If you guessed Aviva, you probably know that she has a history with the arts and painting. She graduated from the Tyler School of Art, Temple University, and after college worked painting theater sets and props in the Philadelphia area. Perhaps even more interesting is the work she did as a background sign painter for the 1988 Hollywood film, Stealing Home, starring Jodie Foster and Mark Harmon.

Today Aviva is our first and second grade Judaics teacher. She integrates art into many of her lessons - drawing on her previous experience as the art teacher at the Jewish Day School in Lancaster.

On a personal note, Aviva and her husband, Mark, have one son, Wesley, who is a graduate of the Silver Academy and is now studying in Israel. Aviva was happy to visit Wesley recently, as she was also revisiting a favorite painting subject, the landscape of Israel.
