General Wesley K. Clark (ret.)

In 38 years of service in the United States Army, Wesley K. Clark rose to the rank of four-star general as NATO's Supreme Allied Commander, Europe. Since retiring from the military in 2000, he has become an investment banker, businessman, commentator, author and teacher. In September 2003, he was a Democratic candidate for President of the United States, winning the state of Oklahoma and launching him to national prominence before returning to the private sector in February 2004. Clark has chaired several public and private companies and is a progressive leader in pursuing energy solutions.
